

Dr. Simone Dohle is Assistant Professor in the Department of Psychology at the University of Cologne. She studied Psychology at the University of Würzburg, Germany, and holds a PhD in Psychology from the University of Zurich, Switzerland. Before joining the University of Cologne, she was a Senior Researcher at the Consumer Behavior group at ETH Zurich, Switzerland, where she managed the Swiss Food Panel, a longitudinal study of the eating and physical activity behavior of the Swiss population. Her research focuses on self-regulation, health behavior change, and determinants of (healthy) eating. In particular, she is interested in understanding the psychological processes underlying food preferences and choices. Her research has been funded by the Swiss National Science Foundation, the Suzanne and Hans Biäsch Foundation, and the German Excellence Initiative. She currently serves as Associate Editor for Nutrition Journal.
